AMY C. WANINGER TO PRESENT AT ANTSHE CONFERENCE 2018

Waninger to speak on diversity in professional networking

Charlotte, NC, January 18, 2018– The Association for Non-Traditional Students in Higher Education (ANTSHE) has invited Amy C. Waninger to present at their 2018 annual conference. ANTSHE Conference 2018 is the premiere conference focusing on adult learners in higher education and the faculty, administrators, advisors, and innovative leaders who provide guidance, support and advocate for them. This year's conference theme is: "The Fight for Academic Equity: Creating Social Cohesiveness Between the Adult Learner and College." The conference offers three days of engaging content, networking, and valuable, high quality education. Waninger's educational session will help participants expand their professional networks with a focus on diversity and inclusion.

In an information economy, what you know is much less important to your career than who you know. Emerging professionals and nontraditional students face a disadvantage because they are not as readily connected to hiring managers, mentors, and others who can propel them forward in their careers. Conversely, companies may struggle to capitalize on this critical talent pool. I look forward to helping adult learners build their networks so they can have broad and lasting impacts in their respective fields.

The ANTSHE Conference will be held March 15-17 at Johnson C. Smith University in Charlotte, North Carolina.
